A 'sacred place' to honour the lost

BARRHAVEN

Memorial park to remember victims of OC Transpo crash

Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

A new memorial park in Barrhaven will tell the stories of six lives lost and dozens injured in one of the city's greatest tragedies.

The site at the Fallowfield Park & Ride will be a place for families and friends to pay their respects to victims of the fatal OC Transpo bus-Via Rail train collision on Sept. 18, 2013.

"This is going to be a very sacred place for them to go and reflect upon the lost lives," Mayor Jim Watson said Wednesday after more details of the park were unveiled at city council.

Connor Boyd, 21, Kyle Nash, 21, Michael Bleakney, 57, Karen Krzyzewski, 53, Rob More, 35, and bus driver Dave Woodard, 45, all died in the crash. Dozens of Barrhaven residents were also on board the bus.

"You just can't go anywhere where people are still not in shock and grieving," said Barrhaven Coun. Jan Harder, who has been meeting individually with the families of those who died in the collision.

The $125,000 memorial involves a bosque, or a formal plantation of trees that form a leafy canopy overhead, with six individual pieces that will each tell a story of a life lost. There may also be a central plaque for people to gather around, as per the families' requests.

> They need a place. They need a place to be close.
> Barrhaven Coun. Jan Harder

Harder said she was hoping the memorial would be finished by June, but it's doubtful the local Barrhaven architect will have the six elements finished by then.

The park will likely be finished by October — almost two years after the collision.

Several lawsuits have been filed against the city and Woodard's estate, but the Transportation Safety Board has yet to release a final report on the collision.

BACKGROUND

Numerous civil lawsuits filed since the water park's inception

There have been about a dozen civil lawsuits filed against Calypso Water Park since its inception relating to injuries happening on site.

That's on top of safety violations stemming from incidents that occurred in 2011 and 2012 on a number of the park's rides.

Last month, the park was found guilty of six safety-related charges and acquitted of another five charges in court.

The park, located east of Ottawa, originally faced 20 safety violations in 2013 brought forward by the Technical Standards and Safety Authority, which regulates amusement park rides in Ontario.

Calypso pleaded not guilty on all counts, and nine of those original charges were dropped in February due to lack of evidence.

Sentencing is set for June 12.

ONTARIO SUPERIOR COURT

Mother claims she broke her elbow in a fall, sought $750K

Joe Lofaro
Metro | Ottawa

An Ontario Superior Court judge has dismissed a personal injury lawsuit filed against Calypso Water Park — the first case to go to trial since the park opened in June 2010.

Danielle Yelle, a mother of two adult children, visited the park on July 11, 2010, with her husband and claimed that she slipped and fell while entering the Jungle Run and broke her right elbow.

She claimed the water park was to blame for her fall and sought $750,000 in damages, while her husband, Pierre Yelle, claimed $75,000 in damages.

The statement of claim alleged Yelle, who was 56 at the time of the incident, "is unable to lift more than 5 to 10 pounds and cannot perform repetitive lifting, pulling, reaching, or activities requiring elbow extension." The lawsuit also alleged she could no longer work as a daycare provider.

Justice Robert Beaudoin ruled in his Feb 25 decision that the plaintiff could not prove Calypso was dangerous and that Yelle slipped "on nothing."

The Yelle family must now pay costs to Calypso. The amount is being kept confidential.

"We think this is an example of the kind of frivolous case that has been filed against Calypso in the last few years," said Sally Gomery, the Ottawa lawyer who defended Calypso in this suit, on Wednesday. Since the water park opened, there have been about a dozen civil lawsuits filed relating to injuries happening on site.

Gomery said she hopes the dismissal of this case will send a message to others who are planning to take the water park to court.

"You can say anything you want in a lawsuit, but once you get to court you have to prove it. And this was not proved."

Gomery declined to say how many of the dozen outstanding lawsuits have been settled or dismissed.

CANADIAN HERITAGE MINUTES

'Burnt toast!' Drink!

Does the phrase "I smell burnt toast!" sound familiar?

If so, you probably grew up watching the dramatic and oh-so-historically-accurate Canadian Heritage Minutes.

If you describe yourself as a fan, you'd be in surprisingly good company: According to Historica Canada president Anthony Wilson-Smith, there's even a drinking game based on the shorts.

"We don't condone this but we're aware of it," said Wilson-Smith. "Somebody names a minute and you're supposed to quote a line from it or you have to take a shot."

"Many people are actually able to chant the entire script. They know the whole thing," he said.

The "pleasantly rowdy" fans of Heritage Minutes took over Ottawa's Mayfair Theatre Wednesday night as part of a four-city premiere of a new minute, based on the role of Canadian nurses during the Second World War.

The 310 free tickets available were sold out a week in advance, with people still asking to be let in.

Similar premieres have been organized before, and Wilson-Smith said the crowd is largely made up of people in their 20s. Attendees are encouraged to shout out famous lines, follow along on Twitter and participate in trivia after the show.

"We say that we like to take our subject matter seriously but not ourselves," said Wilson-Smith. "But there's also nothing else like them in the world."

Denise Andre starts as Ottawa Catholic School Board director of education in July. CONTRIBUTED

Board names new education director

SCHOOLING

Denise Andre takes over role this summer

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

Ottawa's Catholic school trustees announced Tuesday that Denise Andre will be starting as the new director of education in July.

Andre said Wednesday that she's excited to focus on the future of learning and the role technology will play.

"I heard a quote recently that said, 'Innovation happens at the speed of trust,'" she said. "People need to trust in a leader to be able to know that they have the ability to take risks and try to be creative.

"We want our teachers to be as creative as our students."

All 82 schools in the board have had Wi-Fi for a number of years, and Andre has an active social media presence. She said getting teachers comfortable with new technology is a main focus. Andre will need to be innovative in other areas too, as school boards across the province react to budget cuts.

> We want our teachers to be as creative as our students.
> Denise Andre

"There are some financial challenges that we're dealing with," said Andre. In preliminary budgets, the board is expecting a multimillion-dollar deficit.

Andre also has the difficult role of balancing changing values among Catholic teachers, trustees and parents.

Earlier this year, the board faced controversy after two Grade 6 students were told they couldn't do a project on gay rights. At the time, director of education Julian Hanlon called the situation a "misunderstanding."

"In curriculum and in legislation we have requirements that we have to meet," said Andre, when asked how she would approach that situation.

"We need to do that in a way that respects our faith tradition, while at the same time support our students so they feel safe, welcomed and included in all of our schools.

"We continue to work at building understanding and capacity around that."

MENTAL HEALTH

Youth Services Bureau to add new online crisis chat service

Joe Lofaro
Metro | Ottawa

Today's youth rarely pick up the phone to make a traditional call, which is why the Youth Services Bureau of Ottawa is planning to add a new chat feature on its website that would connect a youth with a crisis professional in real time.

The YSB is only in the early stages of developing the text-based service. A request for proposals went out earlier this week. The feature would be an "add-on" to existing crisis services already offered, such as the help line, and the crisis workers would be local.

Ted Charette, assistant director of mental health services at YSB, told Metro he hopes the chat feature will be operational by the end of this year.

"This is something that we've prioritized in our mental health department to try and get up and running," Charette said.

He added projects like this would not be possible without support from sponsors like RBC and the Cowan Foundation.

"We wouldn't be anywhere close to be able to deliver what we think is a crucial service to providing youth in our community.

"We think that this is going to save lives."

Schools serve healthy eats ...

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

Parents, educators and public health came together Tuesday night in the cafeteria of Immaculata High School to talk about creativity in healthy eating and the province's new menu legislation.

Keynote speaker Pascale Messier, an Ottawa Public Health dietician, presented on the details and effectiveness of the province's School Food and Beverage Policy, introduced in 2013.

Not all parents are sure the policy is working as intended.

"My kids go to a school where I don't think they serve very healthy lunches," said Stephanie Cox, whose children attend a Catholic elementary school. "I didn't know about the policy. I'm on the school council and I'll be bringing it up."

Here's what some of the panelists from the night had to say:

"We found that our favourite initiatives were free or very low cost. It's exciting that when our students are cooking in class, they know where the food is coming from. That's local.

Sally Collins, teacher, Norman Johnston Secondary Alternate Program

"Last year our carpentry students built a garden. It was a real community initiative and it was something that brought us all together.

Samuele-Lyn Larocque, Grade 12 student

"We need to get involved. I'm tired of people who complain but they don't act. I do understand that all of us have time constraints, but this doesn't take hours and hours.

Alejandra Dubois, parent, École secondaire publique Gisèle-Lalonde

"Kids preform better with better nutrition, and that's something we need to get across to our students. The other challenge is budget and kids going elsewhere to get fast food.

Christopher Mes, principal, Immaculata High School

... while food trucks hit streets

Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

Like seagulls to beach scraps, hundreds of hungry people flocked to Ottawa City Hall for a food-truck rally on Wednesday afternoon.

It smelled like barbecue and fish 'n' chips as several vendors dished out pulled-pork tacos, egg rolls and churros.

The Mayflower Restaurant, which closed in 2013, was also out on four wheels, serving up burgers and grilled cheese.

Newbie Rico Peru opened for the first time.

"It's a going trend ... and we want to be a part of it," said co-owner Jamie Poitras.

Here's a taste of what was on the menu that day:

Angry Dragonz

The small takeout boxes packed a lot of food — skewers of chicken, beef or lamb over rice and Asian slaw. Marc de Varennes, left, also scored a side of egg rolls.

Rico Peru

A restaurant in the city of Lima for 17 years, Rico Peru is now rolling on four wheels in the National Capital Region, serving traditional Peruvian food. Co-owner Jamie Poitras and his son Liam, left, pulled out this cold tomato salad for lunch.

Bytown Bayou Louisiana Smokehouse

Pulled pork po'boys, bayou barbecue poutine and brisket tacos likely sent everyone back to work in a food coma.

Mobile Mayflower

Ottawa's 35-year-old restaurant may have closed two years ago, but the food-truck equivalent is still cooking fish 'n' chips, burgers and grilled cheese.

Mr. Churritos

BANK STREET

Big-name acts to appear at 'bigger, better' street festival

Joe Lofaro
Metro | Ottawa

A little known street festival on Bank Street has attracted some big names for the second edition of the Glowfair.

Three-time Juno winner Kiesza was announced as headliner for the June 19-20 event, alongside other big names like Toronto-based DJ duo Torro Torro, livetronica group The New Deal, and Jokers of the Scene.

Wakefield's own The Strain will also be taking the stage in this two-day glowing, buzzing, electrifying festival.

Last year, organizers were hoping for about 5,000 people to attend, but instead close to 30,000 showed up.

This year, Glowfair producer Kevin Martin is estimating 40,000 will fill up 10 blocks on Bank Street.

"After our inaugural year we decided to go bigger, better, brighter, and glowier," said festival producer Kevin Martin.

During the two days of the festival, Bank Street from Slater Street to James Street will be closed off and each block will have a specific theme.

The "Summer Solstice" block, for example, from Somerset to MacLaren, will have glow stations set up for people to douse themselves in glowing paints and accessories.

Organizers have also planned ahead to not kill the buzz after 11 p.m. by offering hundreds of free-to-rent wireless Bluetooth headphones for people to enjoy the "silent disco" after hours.

The festival runs 5 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Friday and 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Saturday.

IN BRIEF

Expect delays today during National March for Life

Ottawa police are advising commuters of possible traffic disruptions in the downtown area between noon and 3 p.m. today as the Campaign Life Coalition holds its annual National March for Life.

The march is expected to go from Parliament Hill down Wellington Street beginning at 1:15 p.m. and then onto Elgin Street, Lisgar Avenue, Metcalfe Street, Laurier Avenue West and Bank Street.

Police say there will be some road closings and urge people to take alternate routes. METRO

OUT OF COMA

Ottawa man struck in Miami recovering

Alex Sanghwan, the Ottawa man who was severely injured in a Miami hit-and-run in March, is now recovering in an Ottawa hospital since coming out of his medically induced coma, his family confirmed Wednesday.

The University of Ottawa graduate was walking on a sidewalk trying to hail a cab when he was a struck by a BMW driven by a woman who police say did not have a licence.

A 26-year-old woman was charged with leaving the scene of a collision and reckless driving.

Sanghwan's family could not be reached Wednesday, but loved ones wrote in a Facebook post that the injured man is slowly becoming more responsive.

They wrote he is still not able to walk due to serious leg injuries, but he now can talk, eat and even laugh sometimes with friends and family.

> "The family could not be happier to return home.
> Facebook post by family members

"The recovery is far from over as he will require extensive rehabilitation but he is now able to see and feel all the support he has received through this time," the post read.

"The family could not be happier to return home to a city which has come together to support them in their time of need.

"We ask that you continue to keep Alex in your thoughts and prayers as he recovers from this horrible accident."

OC Transpo buses unreliable, report says

PUBLIC TRANSIT

Only 67% of routes stay on schedule in the morning

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

OC Transpo's annual performance report for 2014 was released Wednesday. The report will be presented to the city's transit committee on May 20.

After Montreal and Toronto, Ottawa has the highest transit use per capita in the country. Ridership across the system only went down slightly, according to the report.

The report includes statistics on the performance of buses, including maintenance, customer satisfaction, safety and timeliness.

As most regular transit users can confirm, buses are not always running on time. The morning peak express route did best, with 81 per cent of buses on time.

But only 67 per cent of regular morning buses ran on schedule.

Afternoons were even worse. Only 59 per cent of regular route buses arrived on time.

Most people are also feeling safe on the buses. Since the amount of special constables was increased in 2012, crime has gone down and the numbers on safety surveys have gone up slightly.

The report also tracks fare cheaters: over 217,000 customers were asked to provide proof of payment.

Around 4.1 per cent were skipping fares. Most were given verbal warnings.

Despite high use, Ottawa buses have trouble staying on schedule throughout the day. METRO

CRIME

Police seize $2,800 in drugs, arrest five

Ottawa police seized a handgun, crack cocaine, cocaine and valium and arrested five people Wednesday after responding to a disturbance call in the 1200 block of Donald Street.

Police seized an unloaded 32-calibre American Bulldog revolver, 11.5 grams of crack cocaine valued at $2,300, 49.5 Valium pills valued at $490, and 0.2 grams cocaine valued at $20.

Pierce James, 18, and Amanuel Mengesha, 20, both of Ottawa, were both charged with possession for the purpose of trafficking Schedule I and Schedule IV substances under Sec 5(2) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.

James was also charged with failure to comply with a probation order and possession of proceeds of crime under $5000 under Sec 355(b) of the Criminal Code.

A 15-year-old male, a 16-year-old male and a 16-year-old female were also charged with drug-related offences.

Each was held for Show Cause and remains in custody for future court dates.

James and Mengesha are scheduled to appear in court May 20.

The Ottawa Police Guns and Gangs Unit says it is continuing the investigation and further charges may be laid in relation to firearms.

Police also took into possession 0.2 grams of cocaine worth $20.

IN BRIEF

CHEO asks parents to Choose Wisely about emergency room visits

The Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario is asking parents to think twice before they take their children to the emergency room.

CHEO has launched a program called "Choose Wisely," an initiative which aims to give parents more information about better ways to get care for fevers, colds, coughs, rashes and minor injuries.

The idea is to free up strained emergency departments for the most serious cases and to leave less serious cases for family doctors or walk-in clinics.

Parents will receive feedback from a doctor at the end of their visit to CHEO about how serious their child's illness or injury was on a scale from non-urgent to urgent to life-threatening.

CHEO says no patient will be turned away.

Fans of Ottawa's music scene may start calling the city just to be put on hold.

The City of Ottawa has paused the elevator Muzak and replaced the cheesy tunes with Ottawa music from local bands.

The Peptides, Boyhood, Ben Globerman, Flying Horses, Formerly Unknown, YAO, JW-Jones, BlakDenim and Fevers are among the 25 musicians selected to play over the 3-1-1 phone lines.

A music jury whittled down 217 applications to pick the playlists, which will rotate over 12-week periods.

Apart from the promotion from the 40-second sound bytes of their tracks, each musician also earns $200 from the #ottmusik program.

Anyone who wants to keep listening after they have hung up can check out the full list of musicians online.

Artists who did not make the playlist this time around can apply to the #ottmusik program next year.

Controversy swirls about memorial

CITY HALL

Councillor calls for protest of proposed site

Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

An Ottawa city councillor is asking his peers to "formally" protest the site of the Memorial to the Victims of Communism.

Rideau-Rockcliffe Coun. Tobi Nussbaum tabled a motion at Wednesday's council meeting asking the federal government to relocate the controversial memorial, which is planned to neighbour the Supreme Court of Canada building.

That land has long been slated for a Federal Court of Canada building to complete the "Judicial Triad," said Nussbaum.

> There's a plan that's been on the books essentially for over 60 years.
> Tobi Nussbaum

"I think it's really important for the federal government to acknowledge and respect the fact that there's a plan that's been on the books essentially for over 60 years," said Nussbaum, adding that the City of Ottawa has been involved in those discussions.

He's not proposing an alternative site, nor is he proposing that council debate the merits of such a memorial. That's not the city's responsibility, he said.

Nussbaum joins the Royal Architecture Institute of Canada, the Canadian Society of Landscape Architects, the Ontario Association of Architects and Supreme Court Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin in denouncing the location of the memorial.

The previous day, Multiculturalism Minister Jason Kenney said he would rather see the memorial on that site than "yet another downtown office tower."

The memorial will commemorate 100 million people who have died under communist regimes.

Ontario says it's time for a national film rating system

Ontario wants to see greater consistency in film ratings across Canada.

The province is creating the Ontario Film Authority, which will incorporate the duties of the Film Review Board to classify, but not censor, every movie before it can be shown in theatres.

Consumer Services Minister David Orazietti says he'd also like to talk with other provinces about creating similar standards across the country for rating films. He says the film industry and movie goers both would benefit from greater co-ordination of standards on a ratings system. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Expressionist drama The Hairy Ape hits Glebe pub

Trevor Greenway
For Metro | Ottawa

There's nothing like slipping into the local tavern, ordering a tall cold one, slamming your hand into a bowl of over-salted peanuts and watching dramatic 1920s expressionism unfold before your eyes.

Wait, what?

Those who waltz into Irene's Pub for an after-work pop next Wednesday will be surprised to see the bar transformed into an intimate theatre setting — one as raw and organic as the iconic Glebe bar itself.

For the first time in the bar's 30 years, Irene's will be staging a live play: Chamber Theatre Hintonburg's production of Eugene O'Neill's The Hairy Ape. The expressionist play follows the struggles of original Brooklyn tough guy Yank (the basis for nearly every Hollywood bad boy character since Jimmy Cagney's tough-as-nails roles), a labourer tirelessly toiling in his hunt for some sense of belonging.

It's a rough-and-tumble tale that gives the audience front-row seats to a man digging deep through his soul in search of his own purpose. It's a real story about a real man dealing with the things so many of us struggle with in life — a perfect story to tell in a bar.

Chamber Hintonburg Theatre actor Donnie Laflamme, as protagonist Yank, during a performance of The Hairy Ape at the Carleton Tavern last month. They will remount the production for one night only at Irene's Pub on May 20. CONTRIBUTED

"People seem to be more engaged because they are closer, they see the actors up close," says director Lisa Zanyk, detailing the setup that will seat showgoers in a circle surrounding the actors. It's the most stripped-down version of any play you'll likely see, making for an intense show that relies heavily on the connection between the cast and the audience.

"We drop all the elite pretenses. It's low-budget, rock-and-roll theatre."

The play is coming off the heels of a hot three-week run at the Carleton Tavern, a run that saw new faces coming in every night. The unique bar setting is attracting new audiences that you would be hard-pressed to find at any typical theatre show: the late worker coming in for a quick pint; the musicians who just finished up a rehearsal; the girls out for a ladies' night. It creates a mixed audience, elbow-to-elbow, all of them glued to the actors, with the clinking of an ice machine in the back and steady pour of beers being refilled.

The Hairy Ape plays one time on May 20 at Irene's Pub. The show starts at 7:30 p.m.

Order a pitcher, some wings and stand up for the oppressed industrial working class!

BLUESFEST

CeeLo's coming to town

Hey Ottawa, "Forget you!"

That's what CeeLo Green will be crooning when he headlines Bluesfest on July 12. Well, he'll likely throw down the non-radio-friendly version of that tune and drop a few F-bombs. Either way, the R&B star will bring energy, funk and some coolness to the festival.

Organizers of Ottawa's premiere music festival announced the new act Thursday morning, along with Australian throwback band Air Supply. It's gravy for an already diverse lineup of acts, from Kanye West and Skrillex to Deep Purple and Keith Urban.

"He is kind of an R&B star," said Bluesfest executive director Mark Monahan, referring to Green.

You've likely heard his 2010 hit single, Forget you, and his equally cool video of the nice guy who doesn't get the girl. And if that doesn't ring a bell, you may remember the ballad Crazy, by Gnarls Barkley. Same guy.

"He's a personality: he was on four seasons of The Voice, and the whole Gnarls Barkley thing was pretty huge. There is a very cool vibe to him, and he has a great stage presence," added Monahan.

Green slides into a motley night of tunes July 12, turning acts like Arkells and Philip Sayce into perfect segue bands. It's the act Monahan was looking for to completely tie the night together.

The 10-day festival, which runs from July 8-18, also features Iggy Azalea, Blue Rodeo, Future Islands and a slew of local bands. TREVOR GREENWAY/FOR METRO

Feds move to exempt RCMP from charges

LONG-GUN REGISTRY

Government says change fixes 'loophole'

The Harper government moved to retroactively rewrite Canada's access-to-information law in order to prevent possible criminal charges against the RCMP, The Canadian Press has learned.

An unheralded change buried in last week's 167-page omnibus budget bill exempted all records from the defunct long-gun registry, and also any "request, complaint, investigation, application, judicial review, appeal or other proceeding under the Access to Information Act or the Privacy Act" related to those old records.

The unprecedented, retroactive changes are even more odd because they are backdated to the day the Conservatives introduced legislation to kill the gun registry, not to when the bill received royal assent.

The date effectively alters history to make an old government bill come into force months before it was actually passed by Parliament.

A source familiar with the complaint, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the government moved out of concern Information Commissioner Suzanne Legault is poised to recommend charges against the Mounties for withholding — and later destroying — gun registry documents while the legislation was still being debated.

Indeed, shortly after the story broke Wednesday, Legault's office announced it would be tabling a special report Thursday detailing an investigation into the long-gun registry and an access-to-information request.

The government feels no one should face a penalty for being overly eager to enforce the will of Parliament before the legislation had been voted into law.

A spokesman for Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney would only say the retroactive law will fix a "bureaucratic loophole" that allowed citizens to request heavily redacted copies of the gun-registry data while the legislation to destroy the data was before Parliament.

> I find this provision almost Orwellian.
> Fred Vallance-Jones, expert in access-to-information law

The retroactive changes in the budget bill leave access-to-information experts aghast.

"It seeks to rewrite history, to say that lawful access to records that existed before didn't actually exist after all and that if you exercised your quasi-constitutional right of access to those records, well, too bad, you're out of luck," said Fred Vallance-Jones, an associate professor at the University of King's College in Halifax and an expert in access-to-information law.

HECKLING INCIDENT

Two soccer fans to be banned

Maple Leaf Sports and Entertainment (MLSE) said two fans from Sunday's Toronto FC game will be banned from MLSE facilities for no less than a year after a vulgar confrontation with a local reporter.

The two men being banned are Shawn Simoes — a Sunshine List employee being fired by Hydro One — and Ryan Hart, according to MLSE. This is an "indefinite suspension," the organization said.

MLSE is still looking for two other goateed men who appeared in the footage with CityNews reporter Shauna Hunt, who both said the viral phrase "F–k her right in the p–y."

MLSE is reviewing its own security video of the verbal attack on Hunt.

The video "will be an element of their investigation," MLSE spokesperson Dave Haggith said on Wednesday. "Our security is in the process of investigating."

That includes identifying a stout man with a BMO shirt and a thinner man with aviator glasses who were filmed with Hunt early in her report.

Once they are identified, the men involved will be banned from all games and events at MLSE facilities for at least a year, Haggith said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

VIRAL

The incident has gone viral and also brought comments from federal Justice Minister Peter MacKay, who praised Shauna Hunt for asking the abusive fans why they felt they had the right to be so offensive.

Lack of legal framework in Iraq questioned in friendly-fire death

Canada has no binding agreement with Iraq that governs the conduct of military forces and is making no attempt to negotiate one, despite the lessons of the deadly friendly-fire incident two months ago.

The revelation is contained in a recently tabled House of Commons reply to a series of written questions posed by the NDP. In the response, the Harper government says it hasn't pursued a so-called status-of-forces agreement with Iraq.

It says it has worked with the government of Haider al-Abadi in Baghdad to ensure appropriate protection for Canadian soldiers taking part in the campaign against the group known as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL).

> It seems as if shortcuts are being taken here.
> NDP defence critic Jack Harris

The Commons response says a status-of-forces agreement is complex, takes time to arrange and is not usually pursued in time-sensitive situations.

But the fact the combat mission has been extended means Canada will be involved in Iraq for a while, and the friendly-fire death of Sgt. Andrew Doiron clearly demonstrates there's a need for a binding legal framework, said NDP defence critic Jack Harris.

PARLIAMENT HILL

MP urges public to push for Reform Act

It's hard to imagine the perpetually upbeat Michael Chong in a bad mood, but the earnest Conservative MP has abandoned hiding his frustration.

Chong has spent about five years crusading for a rebalancing of powers between MPs and party leaders in the Commons. In December 2013, he finally introduced his Reform Act to do something about it — and earned the support of most of the Commons.

But now the bill looks like it might wither away in the Senate, critiqued by both Conservative and Liberal senators who say they might want to tinker with the legislation.

Sources say Chong has made impassioned speeches to his caucus colleagues, both at their weekly meeting Wednesday and to MPs and senators from the Greater Toronto Area in an earlier get-together.

Amending the proposed legislation and thus sending it back to the Commons will spell its demise, Chong insists. The House rises in June, and an election call is expected some time in late summer.

"It would be an abomination if the Senate were to block a democratic reform bill of the House of Commons," Chong said Wednesday outside the national caucus meeting. "Canadians need to contract their senators, demand that the Senate pass the bill before the end of June, because time is running out."

Chong's bill seeks to give MPs the power to trigger leadership reviews, suspend and reinstate colleagues, and select their caucus chairperson.

It also removes from the Canada Elections Act the leader's veto over electoral candidates, while seeking to give more control to local riding officials. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Calgary canine plays direwolf on popular HBO TV show

Jeremy Nolais
Metro | Calgary

He's trained and cared for just outside of Calgary, Alberta but soon Quigley will star as the big wolf in Westeros.

The four-legged lupine, one of 30 belonging to area resident Andrew Simpson, is featured in a few scenes of the wildly popular HBO show Game of Thrones.

Simpson, through his company Instinct Animals For Film, has been training wolves and other animals for big-time Hollywood shoots for more than two decades. He's been involved in projects like the movie Elf, Borat and the Final Destination series, but conceded being part of HBO's popular fantasy drama may be a credit that tops them all.

"The popularity of it, you mention Game of Thrones anywhere in the world and everybody knows it," he said.

> He was doing a lot of snarling and attack stuff.
> Andrew Simpson

Quigley stars in the show as Ghost, the direwolf belonging to fan-favourite underdog Jon Snow. He actually appeared briefly in the already-aired Game of Thrones' Season 5 premiere, but it's scenes in the soon-to-air seventh episode where he really struts his stuff, Simpson said.

"In the first one (episode), he was in a courtyard with Jon Snow," Simpson recalled. "In the seventh one, he was doing a lot of snarling and attack stuff."

Simpson said the show's creators have actually been reaching out to him to be involved since the show began, but he spent the last three years shooting a massive project in China called Wolf Totem. At one point, when the direwolves were a bigger part of the plot, Game of Thrones' producers attempted to bring him and his pack to Ireland.

Finally, this time around, they decided to come all the way to Calgary and filmed the scenes quietly in a city studio this past January.

Simpson says his prized pups and others in the species are greatly misunderstood and attempted to set the record straight with a 2011 documentary called Wolves Unleashed, starring his furry family.

Simpson said, beyond that, bringing high-profile productions like Game of Thrones to Alberta only helps to bolster the local film scene there.

IN BRIEF

Gunmen kill dozens of Shiite Muslims; ISIL claims attack

Gunmen stormed a bus carrying Shiite Muslims in southern Pakistan and ordered them to bow their heads before being shot, killing at least 45 people Wednesday in the latest attack targeting the religious minority.

Who carried out the attack in the port city of Karachi wasn't immediately clear, as a Pakistani Taliban splinter group and an ISIL affiliate both claimed it. However, some Taliban fighters have pledged their allegiance in recent months to the extremist group that now holds a third of Iraq and Syria in its self-declared caliphate.

Iraq officials disagree if airstrike killed senior ISIL commander

Iraq's Defence Ministry said Wednesday an airstrike by the U.S.-led coalition killed a senior ISIL commander and others near the extremist-held city of Mosul, though the country's Interior Ministry later said it wasn't clear if he even was wounded.

The Defence Ministry said the strike killed Abu Alaa al-Afari and others who were in a meeting inside a mosque in the northern city of Tal Afar, 72 kilometres west of Mosul.

The ministry described al-Afari as a senior deputy to ISIL's leader, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi. It did not offer a time for the strike, nor any specific casualty figures. It did offer a black-and-white video clip of an airstrike hitting a building.

Another boat found at sea off Malaysia

ROHINGYA REFUGEES

Denied citizenship by Myanmar, they are stateless

Another boat, this one crammed with 500 Rohingya Muslims and Bangladeshis, was found off Malaysia's coast Wednesday, an activist and an official said, as the international community called on Southeast Asian governments to open their borders and step up search-and-rescue efforts. Thousands of migrants are believed to be stranded at sea.

It was not immediately clear if those off loaded near the city of Penang would be given refuge, said Zafar Ahmad, a Malaysian human rights activist. Their vessel was discovered hours after a maritime official warned that new arrivals would be given food, water and then sent on their way, unless their boats were sinking.

The country has already accepted more than a thousand refugees since Sunday. Wednesday's boat would make it 1,500.

Indonesia, which has taken 600 such refugees, turned a boat away earlier this week. But a foreign ministry spokesman denied Wednesday it had a "push back" policy, saying the vessel strayed into its waters by accident. Armanatha Nasir told reporters the migrants were looking for neighbouring Malaysia.

"We have to help refugees who need assistance and direct them to where they want to go," he said. "It goes against our principle to chase away refugee boats that enter our territory."

Southeast Asia, which for years tried to quietly ignore the plight of Myanmar's 1.3 million Rohingya, now finds itself caught in a spiralling humanitarian crisis that in many ways it helped create.

> Towing migrants out to sea and declaring that they aren't your problem anymore is not a solution to a wider regional crisis.
> Charles Santiago, a member of parliament in Malaysia

In the last three years, more than 100,000 members of the Muslim minority have boarded ships, fleeing persecution, according to the UN refugee agency. No countries want them, fearing that accepting a few would result in an unstoppable flow of poor, uneducated migrants. But governments at the same time respected the wishes of Myanmar at regional gatherings, avoiding discussions of state-sponsored discrimination against the Rohingya.

Denied citizenship by national law, the Muslims are effectively stateless. They have for years faced attacks by the military and extremist Buddhist mobs. They have limited access to education or adequate health care and cannot move around freely.

MIGRANT CRISIS

EU forges ahead with quota plan

The European Union forged ahead Wednesday with a plan to ease pressure on nations dealing with an influx of Mediterranean migrants by requiring other countries to share the burden, despite some strong opposition.

The proposed system would set maximum refugee limits for each country in the EU based on population, employment levels and other factors. The exact details have not been hashed out, but the general idea is that once a country reaches its maximum, migrants seeking asylum there could be sent to other countries, which would have to take them in.

"It is not acceptable for people around the EU to say, 'Yes, stop people dying in the Mediterranean,' and at the same time remain silent when the question is raised, 'What should happen to these people?'" European Commission Vice-President Frans Timmermans said.

Countries including Hungary, Slovakia and Estonia have already rejected the plan, meaning it is unlikely to pass without major caveats and concessions.

But the EU's executive commission sees it as key to forcing the 28 European Union countries to show solidarity with Italy, Greece and Malta, which have been overwhelmed this year by migrants fleeing war and poverty in places like Syria and Eritrea who arrive on their shores after dangerous trips across the Mediterranean.

British interior minister Theresa May said her country would not take part in a quota system as it would only encourage more people to risk their lives. Britain, Ireland and Denmark would be exempt anyway under special agreements.

CATHOLIC CHURCH

Vatican officially recognizes state of Palestine in new treaty

The Vatican officially recognized the state of Palestine in a new treaty finalized Wednesday, immediately sparking Israeli ire and accusations that the move hurt peace prospects.

The treaty, which concerns the activities of the Catholic Church in Palestinian territory, is both deeply symbolic and makes explicit that the Holy See has switched its diplomatic recognition from the Palestine Liberation Organization to the state of Palestine.

The Vatican had welcomed the decision by the UN General Assembly in 2012 to recognize a Palestinian state and had referred to the Palestine state since. But the treaty is the first legal document negotiated between the Holy See and the Palestinian state, giving the Vatican's former signs of recognition an unambiguous confirmation in a formal, bilateral treaty.

"Yes, it's a recognition that the state exists," said the Vatican spokesman, the Rev. Federico Lombardi.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry said it was "disappointed."

"This move does not promote the peace process and distances the Palestinian leadership from returning to direct and bilateral negotiations," the ministry said in a text message.

The United States and Israel oppose recognition, arguing that it undermines U.S.-led efforts to negotiate an Israeli-Palestinian deal on the terms of Palestinian statehood. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EARTHQUAKE

Many in Nepal remain cut off in isolated villages: UN official

Many survivors of Nepal's most recent earthquake remain cut off by blocked roads in isolated villages, a UN official said Wednesday, after this Himalayan nation suffered through its second major quake in less than three weeks.

The magnitude-7.3 earthquake shook the impoverished country Tuesday, killing at least 79 people and injuring more than 2,300, just as it was beginning to rebuild from a devastating April 25 earthquake.

The most recent quake hit hardest in deeply rural parts of the Himalayan foothills, hammering many villages reached only by hiking trails and causing road-blocking landslides.

"Damaged houses were further damaged or destroyed. Houses and school buildings spared before were affected yesterday, roads were damaged," said Jamie McGoldrick, a top UN official in Nepal.

Among 14 quake-hit districts, some are barely accessible, and a large part of the affected population could not be reached easily because of damaged roads.

"Some are even difficult to reach by helicopter. We are facing monumental challenges here to support the government in these districts to have a credible response," McGoldrick said.

Chautara, a foothills town, became a hub for rescuers and humanitarian aid after the first earthquake. Officials there said at least three people had died and more than 60 were injured in the new quake.

Over 40% of hives in U.S. died in past year: Survey

More than two out of five American honeybee colonies died in the past year, and surprisingly the worst die-off was in the summer, according to a federal survey.

Since April 2014, beekeepers lost 42.1 per cent of their colonies, the second-highest rate in nine years, according to an annual survey conducted by a bee partnership including the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"What we're seeing with this bee problem is just a loud signal that there's some bad things happening with our agro-ecosystems," said study co-author Keith Delaplane, with the University of Georgia. "We just happen to notice it with the honeybee because they are so easy to count."

But it's not quite as dire as it sounds. That's because after a colony dies, beekeepers then split their surviving colonies, start new ones, and the numbers go back up again, said Delaplane and study co-author Dennis vanEngelsdorp, of the University of Maryland. But that pushes the bees to their limits, he said.

What shocked the entomologists is that it's the first time they've noticed bees dying more in the summer than the winter, vanEngelsdorp said. The survey found beekeepers lost 27.4 per cent of their colonies this summer. That's up from 19.8 per cent the previous summer.

Seeing massive colony losses in summer is like seeing "a higher rate of flu deaths in the summer than winter," vanEngelsdorp said.

Oklahoma, Illinois, Iowa, Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Maine and Wisconsin all saw more than 60 per cent of their hives die since April 2014, according to the survey.

"Most of the major commercial beekeepers get a dark panicked look in their eyes when they discuss these losses and what it means to their businesses," said Diana Cox-Foster, Pennsylvania State University entomology professor.

Delaplane and vanEngelsdorp said a combination of mites, poor nutrition and pesticides are to blame.

Dick Rogers, chief beekeeper for pesticide-maker Bayer, said the loss figure is "not unusual at all" and said the survey shows an end result of more colonies: 2.74 million hives in 2015, up from 2.64 million in 2014. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Woman receives diploma from 1933

An Indiana woman who will turn 100 years old this month has received her high school diploma more than eight decades after she originally was supposed to graduate.

Lora Lois LeMond White Hardy needed just four credits to earn her diploma from Anderson High School in 1933 when she was forced to quit school to support her family. She finally received that certificate Tuesday at the Anderson Community Schools board of trustees meeting.

The (Anderson) Herald Bulletin reports that Hardy left school at the height of the Great Depression and headed to work at General Motors.

She worked on the assembly line for more than 40 years before retiring in 1976.

Hardy will celebrate her 100th birthday on May 28.

She received the high school diploma some 82 years after dropping out to support her family. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALIFORNIA DROUGHT NURTURE YIELDS TO NATURE ON GOLF COURSES Epic drought is reshaping the golf course at California's El Niguel Country Club, above, and dozens of others statewide. Pressed by a fourth year of bone-dry weather and the threat of state-mandated water cuts, some of the finest courses are ceding back to nature some of their manicured green, tearing out the grass where it won't affect the game, installing smart watering systems and letting the turf they don't rip up turn just a little bit brown. Canada's ad men reflect on lost era

ADVERTISING

Chauvinism, liquid lunches of 1960s Mad Men time gone

As the critically lauded cable series Mad Men approaches its finale on Sunday, Canada's own ad men and women say the world of Don Draper and Peggy Olson is gone for good.

Social change has done away with the liquid lunches and casual chauvinism the show depicts as cornerstones of the 1960s advertising industry, and advertising instructor Michael Rosen says the industry itself has shifted in subtle ways.

Don Draper, the show's central character, is at his best in the pitch meetings, deftly selling his ad agency's services to executives from Kodak, Hilton and Lucky Strike. Rosen, who teaches advertising at Toronto's Humber College, said Draper's skills at building relationships with clients will never go out of style. But he adds that the advertising industry has moved from an emphasis on keeping clients happy to the creative side of the business.

The switch from sales to creative is even evident in office fashions, Rosen said, as the natty suits and expensive watches of Draper and his associates have been replaced by casual wear and tattoos.

Tyler Turnbull, CEO of the Toronto office of FCB, one of the largest advertising agencies in the world. said agencies have become more collaborative since the Mad Men era.

> Crafting a great consumer insight that turns into a big idea is still the foundation of what we do today.
> Tyler Turnbull

Nicholas Quintal, who heads ad agency Rethink's new Montreal office, spent the early part of his career with BBDO, one of the real-life advertising giants that competes with Draper in the fictional world of Mad Men.

He said Draper's pitches often relied on knowing more than his clients about the "mystery" of advertising and production. Now, with smartphones capable of editing photographs and shooting video, that mystique has vanished. "In the time the show was set, no one knew how to do a commercial, it was so mysterious," he said.

Gillian Graham, CEO of the non-profit Institute of Communication Agencies, says the industry still relies on the personal magnetism that Draper exemplifies. "It's a relationship business, always has been and always will be," she said.

Minecraft YouTube's most streamed game

Minecraft has built a big reputation on YouTube.

The video streaming service announced Wednesday that content featuring the virtual brick-building video game has been watched more than any other interactive title in the 10 years since YouTube launched.

"There are over 42 million Minecraft videos on YouTube today," said Ryan Wyatt, YouTube's global head of gaming content. "It's crazy because Minecraft is also the second most searched term."

In honour of the streaming video site's 10th anniversary, YouTube released a list of the top 10 most popular games that have been streamed since the site debuted in 2005.

Rockstar Games' gangster series Grand Theft Auto arrived in second place, followed by Riot Games' multiplayer arena title League of Legends in the third spot, and Activision's Call of Duty military shooter franchise in fourth place. Electronic Arts' soccer simulator FIFA rounded out the top five most streamed games.

The celebrities appear in videos on the blogging website to launch its new #PostItForward campaign, which organizers say is aimed at building a virtual community where it's safe to discuss personal issues such as sexuality, mental health or self-esteem.

Liba Rubenstein, Tumblr's director of outreach, causes, politics and advocacy, said the story of transgender teen Leelah Alcorn, who programmed her Tumblr page to post her suicide note, is among many heartbreaking experiences shared on Tumblr. Rubenstein said the new blog will aggregate such stories and highlight users' positive experiences with social media.

Péladeau could lose, if pigs fly

POLITICS

Chantal Hébert

If media tycoon Pierre Karl Péladeau does not win the leadership of the Parti Québécois hands down, pigs will fly in Canada's political sky for the second time in the space of a month.

To anyone familiar with the PQ leadership campaign, anything short of a first-ballot victory for PKP against his remaining two rivals Friday would come as a surprise, second only to the NDP outcome of last week's Alberta election.

PKP has been cast as the prohibitive front-runner in the race to replace Pauline Marois since the defeated premier resigned on election night 13 months ago. In fact, he was tagged as her successor-in-waiting as of the moment that he ran in the provincial riding of Saint-Jérôme in last year's election.

Former PQ minister Jean-François Lisée was so convinced that Péladeau was unbeatable that he decided not to run. His ex-cabinet colleague Bernard Drainville — the recent champion of the PQ's controversial secularism charter — quit the campaign last month rather than face the humiliation of a distant finish.

Even before Drainville threw his support to Péladeau, there was little suspense about the likely outcome of this contest.

For a good many party members, PKP walks on water. For many of the aging baby boomers who currently make up the age group most likely to support the PQ, he is a corporate-savvy champion that may yet lead Quebec to sovereignty in their lifetimes.

In other circumstances, a recent spate of media stories portraying the front-runner as a man with a remarkably short fuse and a tendency to intemperate outbursts might have given pause to his supporters.

But so strong (or so blind?) is the hope that PKP believers have invested in his capacity to restore the momentum of their dormant cause that many put the negative coverage down to the fear that he supposedly inspires in federalist quarters.

Questions as to the propriety of a party leader owning Quebec's largest French-language media empire have similarly been dismissed as partisan cheap shots rather than omens of potential conflicts of interest to come.

And yet there has been little in Péladeau's leadership campaign to give Quebec's federalists cause to quake in their boots or, for that matter, to justify the faith that he inspires in his followers.

The best that can be said about his performance on the leadership hustings is that it improved along the way. By almost any standards, that still leaves him well short of the skill sets of his most formidable predecessors.

PKP boasts less political experience than any of the party's previous seven leaders. He has nowhere near the eloquence of René Lévesque and Lucien Bouchard or the understanding of public policy of Jacques Parizeau and Bernard Landry.

Public opinion polls have suggested that he could have beaten the ruling Liberals in an election this spring.

But the next campaign is more than three years away, and the PQ's score in recent byelections was not that of a party surfing on the popularity of an incoming star leader.

It earned a measly eight per cent of the vote in the francophone riding of Lévis last fall. Earlier this year, the party kept its long-held seat of Richelieu with a smaller share of the vote than its score in last year's general election.

Support for sovereignty remains tepid, and Péladeau has studiously avoided committing himself to holding a referendum in the first mandate of a PQ government.

The party tent has shrunk dramatically since the last time it had a leadership campaign a decade ago. Back then, it had 140,000 members. Less than half of that number signed up for this month's leadership vote.

There has been little in PKP's campaign to give federalists cause to quake in their boots, or to justify the faith he inspires in his followers.

Over the past four months, the candidates have debated in front of audiences that were typically awash with grey heads.

On that score, the last debate of the campaign last Thursday in Montreal was no exception.

In contrast, there were plenty of younger Quebecers in attendance for a thousand-strong pre-election rally starring NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair the next night.

The sight of a federal NPD leader drawing a bigger francophone crowd in Montreal than the latest saviour of the once-mighty Parti Québécois is as close as one will probably come to watching pigs fly in Quebec this spring.

"If we're paralyzed by our sense of doom, we're the problem."

You can't write off Chris Hedges.

He delivers such dire news in his new book, it'll likely depress you, and then you'll feel guilty for doing nothing about it. Then you might want to brand him an extremist, so you won't have to take him seriously. But that won't assuage your guilt.

In Wages of Rebellion, The Moral Imperative of Revolt, the Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist chronicles the people who can't keep quiet.

They are lawyers, preachers, anarchists, civil-rights activists — people fighting for change, sometimes without hope that change will come. Think Nelson Mandela, Edward Snowden and anti-fracking Alberta preacher Wiebo Ludwig.

"It's about facing systemic injustice" without asking if you'll succeed, Hedges told me. "It's about the obstinacy of faith."

These rebels are rare, and their politics vary widely.

"Eccentric and strange, half-brilliant, half-insane," he said. You might not want them running your country, "but they're absolutely necessary for seismic change."

It's hard to disagree we need change: climate change and corporate greed destroy the environment, democratic elections often fail to bring change, government surveillance diminishes liberty, a frightening inequality of wealth exploits the poor.

Hedges argues the rich and powerful — the sole beneficiaries of all this — are the enemies. If the rest of us are paralyzed by an overwhelming sense of doom, we're part of the problem.

"The gap between who we are and who we think we are is steadily expanding," Hedges writes.

I have to agree. We think we're good until we think of injustices we're doing nothing to end.

It's also easier to accept rebels when they're somewhere else. We cheer protests in the Middle East, but despise Occupy protesters, who forced us to look at ills in our society we'd rather not dwell on.

I am not innocent. I am no revolutionary. But I won't condemn people as "crazy" when they shred the facade. And I won't dismiss Hedges for issuing, in this book, his call to arms for all of us to demand something better.

"My job is to speak the truth," Hedges said. "Not looking, or pretending that things aren't as bad as they are, or that everything will get better, is suicide."

The worst part of his book is the way it doggedly, repeatedly asks: what kind of person, really, are you?

That is, Hedges said, the defining question. It's not what you did in life, it's "what you stood for."

Even mayors can't fight city hall

What does it take to be a good mayor? It may be as simple as being so-so.

"Mediocracy is the word," says Philip Slayton, author of Mayors Gone Bad, a profile of some of the most run-amok mayors Canadians have elected into office in recent years.

"Even if you are not yourself a mediocre person, you will have mediocracy thrust upon you if you become mayor. And, it will be thrust upon you because of the constitutional, economic constraints you can't escape."

More than a collection of stories about the personalities who have made a mark — usually for the worse — the book is a call for constitutional reform to give mayors and cities more power to make decisions for themselves.

When Canada's constitution was put in place, "Cities were way less important than they are now, and far less complex and far less demanding," says Slayton, whose book comes out Tuesday.

Slayton says the issue is not restricted to Canada. New York City has a bigger budget than a lot of countries, but the mayor has to go hat-in-hand to the governor of the state to get funding.

"You don't need to know a whole lot about municipal politics to realize that a mayor has very little power," he says. "That, I think, is partially the explanation why a lot of deadbeats end up in the job. Because, serious people, who understand what it is all about, will take a look and say, 'this is not for me. I can't do what I want to do in that position, I can't benefit the community in a substantial way.'" DEAN LISK/METRO

SLAYTON'S OPINIONS ON...

THE WEST

Nenshi, Iveson and Robertson

While a newspaper writer mentioned a "western triangle of mayoral goodness," referring to Naheed Nenshi of Calgary, Don Iveson of Edmonton and Gregor Robertson of Vancouver, Slayton writes in his book they all exemplify the impotence of the office.

"They are smart, confident, able people, but my point is despite that, they don't seem in my view to be accomplishing a lot at all — and that is because they are unable to, given the constraints put on their office.

WINNIPEG

Sam Katz

Slayton says the mayor, a successful businessman who served from 2004 to 2014, was dogged by conflict of interest allegations (he hosted a roughly $3,000 Christmas lunch for councillors, some municipal employees and their families at a bistro he also owned). "Not a disaster, but someone who could have been a lot more effective and a little more sensitive to the issue of government."

TORONTO

Rob Ford

"I find Rob Ford a lot more complicated than some people do," admits Slayton. "I think the secret to Rob Ford was that he somehow got the little guy, and was appealing to the little guy, and related to him in a way that even people who weren't 'a little guy' found appealing," says Slayton of the Toronto mayor from 2010 to 2014, who has admitted to smoking crack.

OTTAWA

Larry O'Brien

"I think his big problem was that he was a very successful businessman, he made a lot of money in business, but he knew next to nothing about municipal government," says Slayton about the mayor who served from 2006 to 2010 and was acquitted of criminal charges months after being elected. "He just decided it would be a nice thing to be mayor of Ottawa."

HALIFAX

Peter Kelly

"He was a very inadequate mayor," say Slayton about Kelly, who served from 2000 to 2012 and got mixed up in the bungled execution of a will that blighted his political career. "Someone with poor judgment, somebody who had tendencies towards grandiosity as he went along; someone who seemed out of touch with reality."

An ode to the reign of Elvis Costello

NEW RELEASE

Richard Crouse's book on Costello full of fun facts

Liz Brown
Metro | Life

The 1970s in Britain was a decade of unemployment, labour unrest and massive inflation. In short, a breeding ground for pissed off youth with no money, no hope and a lot of time on their hands.

It was in this world that Declan McManus toiled in pub rock bands around London. He was a suburban dad who dreamed of getting his break in the music biz as he slaved at his day job as a computer operator at Elizabeth Arden.

That break came by way of the freshly minted Stiff Records, a label that defied labelling. Stiff founders Jake Riviera and Dave Robinson saw in McManus a talented musician and songwriter, but a guy in need of a makeover. They gave him Buddy Holly glasses with the instructions "don't f—ing take them off." They dressed him in a narrow lapelled suit jacket and rolled stovepipe jeans. And they christened him with a new name because, according to McManus himself, the moniker Declan evoked images of "a guy in a cable-knit sweater singing whaling songs." The year was 1977 and Elvis Costello was born.

In his new book, titled Elvis is King: Costello's My Aim is True, film critic, Metro columnist and Costello super fan Richard Crouse details the making of the musician and his debut album. The book is a snapshot of a turbulent time in Britain's music history. Through the book, Crouse examines Costello's stylistic songwriting but, like most fans, is reticent to pigeonhole the singer-songwriter into one musical category. Instead, he analyzes the individual tracks and links them to the time and Costello's own life.

Crouse was a 14-year-old in Liverpool, N.S. when his brother brought him My Aim is True.

"When I listen to this album, I'm immediately transported back to a very specific time in my life. My mom was ill for the entire time I was growing up and she died when I was 15 years old. ...And this record was the sound of my anger in a lot of ways," he says.

> "Welcome to the Working Week is a song that gets played in the house at least once a day
> Richard Crouse

In the book, Crouse writes of the album, "'joy is fleeting' seems to be Costello's overarching message here."

Indeed, Costello taps a universal truth: Life is hard and unfair, but you have to keep rockin' on.

GET FREEKEH

How to cook the latest 'it' super grain

WORD OF MOUTH

Theresa Albert
myfriendinfood.com

I'm pretty sure that you need to have a weird name to qualify as a super grain. Just as you are learning how to pronounce quinoa, freekeh (freekuh) takes its spot. Freekeh is simply green wheat kernels that are harvested early and toasted. Legend has it that their yum factor was discovered by mistake when a Middle Eastern village was plundered and the unripe wheat field was set afire. Rather than crying over burnt wheat, it was harvested and cooked in water to a tasty, toasty pilaf. Take that, would-be plunderers!

As luck would have it, green wheat is more nourishing than ripe wheat.

It has more protein, is a resistance starch (which means it burns slowly so it won't raise your blood sugar like some other starches), and supports the good bacteria in your gut.

Freekeh is an unripe wheat. ISTOCK

To cook freekeh:

- Use an almost 3:1 ratio of water or stock for a savoury dish, almond milk for a breakfast or sweet dish.
- Simmer covered for 35 to 45 minutes until the grain is at the chewiness of your liking
- Stir in cooked vegetables, garlic and olive oil or dried fruit and nuts. Freekeh can go either way.
- Cooked freekeh can be stored in the fridge up to seven days and scooped out into soups or salads. It can also be stir-fried like rice or used as oatmeal.

Wes Anderson hopes to inspire with design

BAR LUCE

Beloved U.S. director draws inspiration from '50s, '60s

Filmmaker Wes Anderson has designed a new bar in Milan, housed within Prada's new art and cultural institution.

Formica tables, veneered wood wall panels, pink and mint green seats, pinball machines and a jukebox are used to recreate the atmosphere of a typical Milanese café circa 1950s and '60s at Bar Luce. Or a café that would inspire a screenwriter.

"While I do think it would make a pretty good movie set, I think it would be an even better place to write a movie. I tried to make it a bar I would want to spend my own non-fictional afternoons in," Anderson said in a statement.

The director behind movies such as The Grand Budapest Hotel and The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou preserved the original structure's arched ceiling in a nod to the vaulted glass roof and arcades of the Galleria Vittorio Emanuele II, one of Milan's most iconic architectural landmarks and one of the world's oldest shopping centres.

Opened over the weekend, the bar is part of the Fondazione Prada, a sprawling artistic complex and exhibition space housed within a former distillery dating from the early 1900s.

Wes Anderson fans may also recognize some of the motifs in the café from his short film Castello Cavalcanti — set in Italy in 1955 with Jason Schwartzman — as well as a Steve Zissou-themed pinball machine.

Anderson isn't the only filmmaker to parlay his cinematic visions to a brick and mortar space. In 2011, David Lynch opened an exclusive Paris nightclub called Silencio, with a private member's fee.

The apple of all beer drinkers' eyes

LIQUID ASSETS

Peter Rockwell
@therealwineguy

If Dr. Frankenstein was alive today, he'd own a brewery.

Never one to leave well enough alone, beer makers big and small have been piecing together their brews with all sorts of off-the-wall ingredients for years.

While some creations, like Wells' Banana Bread Beer (500 ml, $3.09 - $3.99) from the U.K., are inspired craziness, many others, like the recent trend towards lime-infused beer, are totally mass-market driven.

The popularity of cider has made the apple 2015's ingredient of choice for both craft and corporate breweries.

While it's still all about the fruit, Sage's Crazy Beard Wild Apple Ale (473 ml, $2.95 - $3.99) gives you a bit more beer flavour for your buck.

Bud Light Apple (12 x 355 ml, $17.99 - $26.199) is based on a subtle beer to begin with so, for the most part, you'd be hard pressed to tell this brew from a mainstream cider.

Prices reflect the range across the country. Some products may not be available in all provinces.

APPETITES

Bourdain's new book

Anthony Bourdain's cookbook Appetites will be released in fall 2016. CONTRIBUTED

Anthony Bourdain, one of the most irreverent, mordant, straight-shooting and simultaneously likeable hosts on food TV, will be releasing a new cookbook, his first in a decade, and this time written specifically for the home cook.

Called Appetites, the cookery book features favourite home cooking and entertaining recipes from the globetrotting chef, TV host, writer and raconteur.

Or, in his own words: "a psychotic, anally retentive, bad-tempered Ina Garten."

The result, says publisher Ecco, an imprint of HarperCollins, is a book that boils down 40 years of travels and professional cooking into a tightly curated repertoire of the chef's favourite home recipes — dishes he serves his own family and friends at his home in New York.

Bourdain is one in a string of celebrity chefs including Ferran Adria, Heston Blumenthal and Thomas Keller penning more accessible, simplified cookery books for the at-home chef.

Appetites will be photographed by Bobby Fisher, and the cover illustrated by British cartoonist Ralph Steadman, best known for his collaborations with Hunter S. Thompson.

The book will also feature a bonus pull-out poster of a deconstructed burger, as seen by Nathan Myhrvold, the culinary scientist behind the encyclopedic series Modernist Cuisine.

SCARJO'S GOLDEN CURVES; MAD MAX INCURS MISOGYNISTIC FURY

Mathematically, Scarlett's perfect

As far as ideals of perfect physical beauty, one from all the way back in Ancient Greece seems pretty tough to argue with, yeah? That's at least what lingerie brand Bluebella seemed to be thinking when they checked to see how a bevy of female celebrities stacked up against the "Golden Ratio" of curves (1.618 for all you math nerds out there).

According to this very scientific study, Scarlett Johansson is as "close to physical perfection" as any living celebrity thanks to her ratio of 1.560. Kim Kardashian came in second, while Helen Mirren nabbed third.

MRAs calling for Mad Max boycott

It looks like word of the secret girl-power bent in Mad Max: Fury Road has reached those lovable, reasonable folks in the Men's Rights Activists movement. One blog, Return of Kings, is calling for a full-on boycott of the souped-up action movie.

"Men in America and around the world are going to be duped by explosions, fire tornadoes and desert raiders into seeing what is guaranteed to be nothing more than feminist propaganda," Aaron Clarey writes.

"Hollywood is a garbage propaganda machine which spews out this feminist drivel filth into the minds of today's young audience. Even though science has told us and proven, that men are physically stronger than women, it is nonetheless discarded by the forces driving this feminist nonsense."

Honestly, isn't this, like, the best endorsement a film can receive?

More celeb women using star power to start businesses

These days, one of the most-coveted roles among A-list actresses is business owner.

Oscar winner Halle Berry is one of the latest female celebrities to start a business. She launched Scandale Paris last year, a line of lingerie sold at Target stores.

For decades, famous faces have been hired by big corporations to sell hair dye, lipstick and high-end fashion. But now, more female celebrities are taking control and starting their own businesses. It's also helping some balance career and motherhood.

"Having a business like this, I can do more work at home, be with my family," said Berry, who is co-owner and creative director of Scandale Paris. "I have two little kids now. I can't travel around the world and do a movie like I used to."

Walmart shoppers can pick up lip gloss, mascara and perfume made by Flower, a makeup brand co-owned by actress Drew Barrymore. Fitness fanatics can buy a pair of yoga tights from Fabletics, an online seller of workout gear co-founded by actress Kate Hudson.

"It's way more lucrative than making one movie a year," said Jo Piazza, author of Celebrity, Inc.: How Famous People Make Money.

Berry stumbled upon Scandale Paris during a trip to France. Founded more than 80 years ago, the brand was struggling because the undergarments were too expensive, Berry said. She called her business partner, Erik Ryd, and they bought the company. In October, Scandale's $7 panties and $18 bras began selling at Target. In France, they're sold at Carrefour.

Berry is involved with the design of the lingerie and chooses fabrics, even as she films the second season of CBS show Extant. In the next few months, Scandale Paris will be sold in Canada, Asia and more European countries.

Male stars have always had their hand in business ownership, said Piazza, but more women are getting into the game. Owning a business gives stars the potential to make more money over a longer period of time than with short-term endorsement deals. And they have a better chance of succeeding than an average small business owner, since stars come with built-in customers: Their fans.

Decorating tips for your condo or apartment that will also keep your board or landlord happy.

Q: I recently purchased a condo and would like to stamp my decor on it. What are some easy decorating investments I can make?
— Jann, via email

A: Whether a renter or condo dweller, there are limitations to what you can and cannot do when decorating and renovating your space. Here are a few decorating ideas that most landlords and condo boards are willing to allow in order to have the stylish home you have always dreamed of:

WALLS

Paint is the most inexpensive way to add drama to your home.

I suggest painting one wall a darker tone of a neutral that is already existing in your decor scheme. For instance, if you have a grey upholstered headboard then paint the wall behind it a much deeper grey. Using a high-gloss sheen paint will add an instant touch of glamour to any space.

Wall decals and peelable wallpaper are great options to add interest to bland walls and create a focal point without ruining the existing painted walls.

Adding strip moulding to a wall can give a sense of subtle architecture to a room. Use square-edged holdings for a contemporary feel and curved for traditional.

KITCHEN AND BATH

If you own your place, then updating old countertops, sinks and faucets is a great investment to consider.

Look for dark concrete-coloured counters, bronze faucets and square-shaped sinks to help give your rooms that up-to-date trendy look.

Always use licensed trade professionals to do this type of work; most condo boards have a list of preferred trades who have worked within the building and know the condo board rules when renovating.

A colourful shower curtain is the easiest way to add big impact to a rental bathroom (and it can hide chipped hubs and mouldy grout).

Match new towels and floor mats with the shower curtain for a cohesive look in a small space.

LIGHTING

Inexpensive picture lights help to illuminate artwork and wash the walls with soft light; under-cupboard lighting in a kitchen will not only be helpful when preparing food but also add a sexy glow at night.

Dimmer switches on every overhead light will put you in full control of creating the most flattering light; remember to call in a professional to do any type of hard-wiring or electrical work.

Square-edged strip mouldings add strong architectural lines and create a focal point in a plain room. CB2.COM

The Vertigo lamp by Petite Friture. PETITE FRITURE

Petite Friture reissues lamp for anniversary

The French home furnishings brand Petite Friture is celebrating its fifth anniversary by re-issuing one of its best-selling products: the Vertigo pendant lamp.

Launched five years ago, the light fixture helped Petite Friture establish its reputation both in France and abroad.

In January 2010, Petite Friture introduced its very first collection, including the particularly successful Vertigo pendant lamp.

The brand has even described clients' reactions to the design as "love at first sight."

Several retailers were won over by the ethereal design, which is made of polyurethane, fibreglass and metal wire.

Vertigo goes on display

Created by French designer Constance Guisset, the Vertigo went on display at the Salone del MobFile in Milan shortly after its debut and soon earned a spot in the Italian city's prestigious Rossana Orlandi design gallery.

Now, five years later, the pendant lamp is about to be reissued in two new colours: light blue and light pink.

Both versions are available with small (140 centimetre dimeter) or large (200 centimetre dimeter) bases in white.

Set to go on sale worldwide from June 1, these new versions of the Vertigo lamp will be available in the meantime at select retail outlets in France, Belgium and Sweden.

Petite Friture furnishings are sold by more than 300 retailers worldwide.

The blame is on me: Price

CANADIENS

Teammates defend star goalie after elimination

Carey Price won the Montreal Canadiens a division title and got them to the second round of the playoffs. Ultimately, he couldn't save them from elimination.

Minutes after the Canadiens' season ended Tuesday night with a Game 6 loss to the Tampa Bay Lightning, Price took responsibility for the playoff exit.

"I didn't play well enough for us to win the series," Price said. "I think that's basically more or less what it comes down to. We lost a lot of tight games. I just needed to make that one more save in all the games that we lost and I didn't do that."

Price's numbers, a 2.53 goals-against average and .896 save percentage, were below his amazingly high bar from an MVP regular season. But that doesn't tell the whole story of the series against the Lightning.

The Habs scored just 13 goals, six of them coming in a Game 4 rout when on the brink of elimination. They had two or fewer in the other five games, putting the pressure on Price to be almost perfect. The likely Hart and Vezina Trophy winner was disappointed he couldn't be, but defenceman P.K. Subban wasn't accepting Price taking the blame.

"I don't care what Carey says, we need to be better around him and support him more," Subban said. "I think too many times this year he's bailed us out and that's got to change moving forward if we want to be a successful team in the regular season and the post-season.

"There's going to be ups and downs, and it's tough to be at that level every single game. He's managed to do it this year, but we have to realize our job is to make his job easier, not to make it more difficult."

With his pointed comments Tuesday night, Subban got to the root of Montreal's biggest problem: relying too much on Price. The 27-year-old led the NHL with a 1.96 GAA and .933 save percentage, and his brilliance masked the Habs' deficiencies.

They were one of only two teams to make the playoffs after being outshot on average over the course of 82 games, and they were 20th in goals a game. But with Price leading the way, the Habs allowed the fewest in the league.

Price gave up an overtime goal in Game 1 and one in the final seconds of regulation of Game 3 against the Lightning, which was enough to make the difference in the series but not enough to convince teammates it was his fault.

"Carey was our best player all year and most valuable player this season," Pierre-Alexandre Parenteau said in French. "To me, he was very good in the playoffs." THE CANADIAN PRESS

WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP

Crosby relishing his role as leader

When Sidney Crosby decided to play at the world hockey championship after his Pittsburgh Penguins were ousted from the NHL playoffs, it didn't occur to him that his role on Team Canada would be much different than the last time he competed at the tournament.

Back in 2006, Crosby was a fresh-faced 18-year-old who had just finished his rookie season in the NHL. Nearly a decade later, he has two Olympic gold medals, two Hart trophies and a Stanley Cup to his name.

Sidney Crosby GETTY IMAGES

"I never thought I was going to be one of the older guys on the team," the 27-year-old Canadian captain said after practice Wednesday. "But it's kind of worked out that way."

Crosby was Canada's offensive catalyst in 2006, amassing 16 points in nine games and becoming the youngest player to win a world championship scoring title.

2009

The last time Canada won a world championship elimination game. Canada has suffered quarter-final defeats in the past five tournaments

He's still a big part of Canada's attack this year with three goals and four assists in six games, but he also provides veteran leadership for a talented but young team. That steadying presence is crucial for Canada as it heads into its quarter-final match against Belarus on Thursday.

"He has provided tremendous leadership both on the ice and off the ice, as he should," said Canada coach Todd McLellan. "He's been to so many of these events. He's won so much that guys look to him and he continues to carry that torch for our country." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Noted labour attorney assigned Brady's appeal

Noted labour attorney Jeffrey Kessler will aid in the players' union's planned appeal of Tom Brady's suspension.

The New England Patriots quarterback was suspended by the NFL for the first four games of the 2015 season for his role in the deflating of footballs. He has until 5 p.m. EDT on Thursday to file the appeal. His lawyer, Don Yee, and the union have said they will appeal. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEFLATEGATE

Colts stay neutral amid NFL scandal

Indianapolis Colts players did their best Wednesday to toe the company line about the scandal dubbed "Deflategate."

They kept repeating coach Chuck Pagano's mantra about moving on as they deflected question after question. They avoided the word "cheater." They even tried to stay away from the possibility of Patriots quarterback Tom Brady making his season debut in Indy on Oct. 18.

Nobody in the organization contends Indy's loss in January was the result of illegal footballs. The Colts have instead spent time fortifying their roster, including the signing of a handful of veteran free agents on defence. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ready in
Prep time: 10 minutes
Baking time: 30 minutes

Ingredients
- 1 large ripe banana, mashed (about ½ cup)
- ¼ cup vegetable oil
- ¾ cup granulated sugar
- 1 large egg
- 1 tsp vanilla extract
- ¼ cup reduced-fat sour cream
- ¾ cup all-purpose flour
- 2 Tbsp whole wheat flour
- 1 tsp baking powder
- ½ tsp baking soda
- ⅓ cup semisweet chocolate chips

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 350°F. Lightly coat an 8- × 4-inch loaf pan with cooking spray.

2. Using a whisk or an electric mixer, combine the banana, oil, sugar, egg, vanilla and sour cream in a large bowl until smooth.

3. In another bowl, combine both flours, baking powder and baking soda. With a wooden spoon, stir the dry mixture into the banana mixture until the dry ingredients are just moistened. Fold in the chocolate chips.

4. Pour into the prepared pan and bake for about 30 to 35 minutes or until a tester inserted in the middle of the loaf comes out clean. Let the loaf cool in the pan on a wire rack before removing and slicing into 8 slices.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
You don't lack for confidence at the moment but confidence can only take you so far. At some stage you will have to deliver on all the big promises you have made, to yourself and to others.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
It may seem as if time is running out, that if you don't start something now the opportunity will pass you by. Common sense should tell you that simply isn't true. You will always get another chance, so take your time and get it right.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You are coming to the end of one of the toughest times of the year and when the Sun moves into your sign a week from now your confidence will come flooding back. Take it easy for now.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Try not to let praise go to your head today because there is a real possibility that someone is bigging you up just so they can knock you down again. Anyone who encourages you to take risks and cut corners is not to be trusted.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Something will happen over the next few days that seems like a setback, but later in the month it will become clear it was exactly the opposite, so stop worrying. Focus on the here and now.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Do not say anything you suspect may not be true. The words may not have come from you originally but the planets warn it is you who will take the blame. Never trade in gossip or hearsay.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Let others take care of you for a change. Life has been tough of late and you deserve a break — in fact you deserve a vacation. You will be working hard again soon enough.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You may not be the most original member of the zodiac but you are certainly the most determined, so keep plugging away and don't worry that others seem to be doing better than you.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
A problem you have been grappling with may be tough but there is a solution, so keep asking and keep searching and you will find what you are looking for in the end.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
The Sun remains in the most dynamic area of your chart for one more week, which means you still have time to start something new. Pay no attention to those who counsel caution.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Family and financial issues need to be dealt with fast, before they get even more tangled. The Sun's move into your fellow Air sign of Gemini next week suggests fun times.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
You seem to have a lot to say for yourself at the moment, which is fine, but if you talk too loud and too fast you may miss something worth hearing, something that could both have made you money and saved you trouble.
